Everyone's dancing to the beat thumping loudly in their headphones. The energy is palpable, but to an outsider, it would appear that hundreds are dancing to the beat of silence. At Quiet Clubbing events, every dancer wears a pair of wireless headphones tuned to three live DJs spinning some tunes, anything from '80s to Top 40.

These headphone parties have become quite the rage, silent discos making (silent) noise across the nation. And this isn't for everyone — some people prefer to be dancing to what everyone else is dancing to; but for many, this is something special. Your experience is unique, and while you may not be jamming to the same song as everyone else, you're dancing in a community. You control the DJ. And when a quarter of the room starts breaking out into the cotton-eyed Joe, we're pretty sure the rest of the venue will change stations and join in.

Coming up in NYC on September 12th, join in the fun as Quiet Clubbing takes over the NYC Subway for a combination of flash mob, dance party and city tour all mixed into one night. Meet at Grand Central station, but travel to several iconic NYC subway platforms, terminals and bars.
